She had nothing to look forward to; absolutely. Reprint, New York: Penguin, Rosen starts her narrative with a discussion of the publication The Feminine Mystique [1] by Betty Friedan, [2] which she views as a watershed in moving women's issues from the hidden corners of society out into the open, looks at how the notions of a women's proper place in society was used as a weapon in the cold war, discusses the various ways in which women began to assert themselves, and finally moves to Magic Thoughts: A Dictionary of Aphorisms discussion of modern women's liberation movements which largely grew out of leftist politics, and most importantly, civil rights movement. When you're depressed you tend to blame yourself for everything; you rarely acknowledge anything good about yourself or your life.
